SNOW & SKIING IN THE ALPES-MARITIMES

FROM COASTAL TOURISM TO THE PEAKS: THE ASCENT OF WINTER SPORTS

A humanitarian mountain enthusiast, Chevalier Victor de Cessole joined the Club Alpin Français in 1889, then decided to introduce the Côte d'Azur peaks to the middle-classes holidaying on the coast of the Côte d'Azur. Just like Lord Brougham had done to attract the British middle-classes to Cannes, he invited friends from high society to share his wonder in front of the beauty of these landscapes and practice skiing, sledging, ice-skating in the mountains of the Alpes-Maritimes.

The Chevalier de Cessole told of his expeditions through articles and photographs of the peaks and villages, and made friends with climbing celebrities. As he gradually conquered the summits, he created real archives about a territory which was then unknown. His aim: to introduce the Alpes-Maritimes massif, the least known of all the Alps. He never stopped photographing the rapidly changing mountains.

From his first traditional photographs, the unchanged mountain villages transformed gradually with the conquest of the heights by hiking and climbing through to the construction of refuges and the progressive equipping of snowy slopes. Cessole it was who launched skiing in the region by organising at Peïra Cava the first competition with the Chasseurs Alpains, before inaugurating the first downhill and ski-jump competitions at Beuil les Launes with the Ski Club des Alpes-Maritimes.

In the Early 20th Century, the Northern Alps were captured by this new craze for winter sports. The Alpes-Maritimes, in their turn, also gained to have a certain attractiveness. In 1936, the Valberg resort was established and the first ski-lift in the department was inaugurated. In 1937, France's third cable car was installed in Auron. From 1938, the French Downhill Ski Championships were organised there.

Today, the Côte d'Azur has become an international brand, but its hidden treasure still lies in the high country region. Indeed, the mountains, under the PURE ALPES brand, represents 80 % of the Alpes-Maritimes land mass. Thanks to the power of the local authorities (the Department of the Alpes-Maritimes and the Métropole Nice Côte d'Azur) which have opened up these valleys over many years and invested in the resorts, the Côte d'Azur can today claim to be a remarkable and unexpected place for winter sports and the discovery of exceptional sites.
